We, at the Utah Center for Reproductive Medicine, appreciate the fact that infertility is a stressful experience for patients and the emotional strain for an advanced reproductive technology (ART) cycle is considerable.

It is not uncommon for patients to have difficulties dealing with the many emotional issues associated with the ART process. Undergoing the ART process sometimes evokes feelings, emotions, and interactions that are troublesome for patients.

We encourage you to work with a counselor who can best address the emotional aspects of fertility treatment. Here at UCRM, we recommend:

Laura A. Czajkowski, Ph.D. (801) 585-5873

To our patients undergoing IVF:

We understand that there is a growing interest in the use of acupuncture during embryo transfer. Reviews and individual studies on the benefits of acupuncture show conflicting results, and at present, there are no clearly defined benefits with regards to deliveries.

While we do not encourage acupuncture, we would like to be able to accommodate those who wish to pursue it. However, acupuncture during embryo transfer may require extended use of the procedure room. This affects our ability to care for other patients in a timely fashion. Thus, we ask that you please notify us prior to your transfer date that you are planning to have acupuncture during your procedure so we can schedule appropriately.

You will be assessed an hourly room fee for your time in the room used solely for acupuncture (time for the actual transfer and recovery are excluded, please ask for details). Thank you so much for your understanding in this issue, and we wish you the best in your endeavors.
